PREFACE

THIS fourth cumulation of the READERS' GUIDE includes a period of four years instead of five, a change of plan which has met with general approval. The present volume, covering as it does the years 1915-1918, is almost coincident with the European war period, and except for eleven pages in volume III, includes references to all the contemporary periodical literature of the war published in the magazines indexed by the GUIDE. The entries in Volume IV under the heading European war fill 96 pages and it is impossible to estimate the references touching less directly on the subject.

The bringing together into one alphabet of such a mass of material on one subject, has necessitated still further subdivision. The material under the heading European war—Peace and mediation, which would otherwise have filled over four pages of undivided entries, has been separated by country, this subdivision including not only the official peace proposals emanating from various governments, but also the public opinion for or against peace in each country. It is hoped that the chronological arrangement under European war—Campaigns and battles—Western front, will prove useful. Any alphabetical filing by battle was made impossible by the fact that during the course of the four years the fighting was done back and forth over the same ground.

In regard to new subject headings, the policy of the GUIDE is, of course, to follow the usage of the specialists in each subject. When these disagree, as frequently happens, and each writer uses a different expression to represent the same idea, it is necessary in indexing to adopt the one which seems most descriptive until an approved usage has developed. Sometimes a long established heading must be changed when experts swing from one phrase to another to describe their subject. This is the case with the present heading Home economics, substituted for the earlier one Domestic science. The headings Free speech and Freedom of the press now supplant Liberty of speech and Liberty of the press. With the growth of a subject not only is the further subdivision of the headings in use essential, but the number of headings must be increased. For example, in 1915 the linked heading Balloons and airships, was found sufficient, while in the present cumulation both Airships (used only for dirigibles) and Balloons appear. Among the new headings which have become necessary in the last four years are Academic tenure, Battlefields, Bombardment, Camouflage, Freedom of the seas, Merchant marine, Pacifists, Free verse, Supervised study. As may be observed developments lie almost as much in the educational field as in military matters. It would be fairly safe to prophesy that the important changes of subject headings during the period of the next cumulation will be in the field of economics, especially in matters touching upon labor and industrial relations, and in aeronautics.

We have in the course of the four years added to our list twenty periodicals. So far as possible the indexing of these was carried back either to the first number issued or to the beginning of 1915, but, to the regret of the publishers, this has not been possible in a few cases. We have lost during this period twelve magazines for various reasons, including the merging of one periodical with another, discontinuance altogether or a change of character in the magazine which rendered it unsuitable for indexing.

Until May, 1918, when she became librarian of the United States Rubber Company, Miss Marion A. Knight was in charge of the indexing and editorial work of the READERS' GUIDE and it is due to her faculty for co-ordination that more revising was not necessary for an index covering a period full of change and momentous happenings. Too much praise can hardly be given those members of the staff who have carried through with accuracy and devotion the various details incident to a large cumulation.
